MUKDEN, Nov. 28.—(INS).—The Japanese military offensive against Chinchow was abandoned today.

Under orders from the Japanese headquarters here, troops which had advanced southward along the Peiping-Mukden Railway with the intention of occupying the city, began to withdraw eastward across the Liao River.

Before the orders to "cease firing" reached the front, Chinese and Japanese troops clashed at Tahushan, resulting in the killing of two Japanese aviators and two employees of the South Manchuria Railway.

The Japanese field commanders were instructed, however, to avoid further hostilities.

Chinchow, last remaining Chinese stronghold in Manchuria, whose capture was deemed certain when the Japanese halted their advance within 30 miles of the city last night, thus won a temporary reprieve, apparently under instructions from the Tokyo government.

It was announced at General Honjo's headquarters that all troops which took part in the southward offensive would be moved as rapidly as possible between Chulihuo and Hsinmin toward the zone of the South Manchuria Railway.

Hsinmin, a walled town which was occupied a few days ago, will be turned back to the Chinese authorities, but a few Japanese soldiers will remain to guard the Japanese Consulate.

VIRGINIA RESORTS ARE ATTRACTIVE TO TOURISTS

Hilton Village Not Surpassed
By Any in This Region

OUTLINES MOTOR TOUR

Along the historic James River and the Chesapeake Bay regions of Virginia are a score of delightful resorts that annually attract throngs of tourists. None of these playgrounds surpass Hilton Village as a recreational center and from this quaint old town side trips can be made into nearby resorts set amid rich historic background.

The Keystone Automobile Club has outlined an interesting motor tour to this section of the Old Dominion, which can be covered in approximately 688 miles, according to Russell B. Carty, representative of the club.

From Bristol the tour leads over the Boulevard, then over Hunting Park avenue and City Line avenue to Llanerch, where a left turn is made into Darby Road which is followed to Lansdowne, where the Baltimore Pike U. S. Route 1 is met. Here a right turn carries the travelers southward over U. S. Route 1 through Oxford, Baltimore, Washington, D. C., and Fredericksburg to Richmond, Va.

From here U. S. Route 60 winds down through the York-James Peninsula to Hilton Village.

Located in the heart of one of the most historic sections of the Old Dominion, Hilton Village forms an excellent point from which to make tours into adjoining scenic regions and vacation playgrounds of the old South. Jamestown, site of the first permanent settlement by the English in Virginia in May 1607 is a short distance away along the James River. Nearby is Historic Williamsburg, seat of the royal governors of the colony after 1699. In this direction also lies Yorktown, settled in 1691 and the scene of Cornwallis' surrender in October 1781.

Another journey that can be made from Hilton Village leads to Newport News, which was founded by Irish colonists in 1621 and has grown to be one of the greatest deep water terminals along the coast. Here is located the largest shipbuilding plant in the world. Following the highway from this point the tourists reach Hampton, where is located the National Soldiers Home, enroute to Old Point Comfort and historic Fortress Monroe. Buckroe Beach, a noted Chesapeake Bay resort is located in this vicinity while a short distance inland is found Langley Field, a noted government airport.

The attractiveness of the James River Bridge Route with its five and one half miles of spans connected by concrete highways offers pleasant side trips to Portsmouth and Norfolk. From the latter city an excellent coastal boulevard carries the travelers through Ocean View and Cape Henry to Virginia Beach, all noted resort centers. Southward from Virginia Beach lies the famous back bay a paradise for anglers and hunters. On the homeward journey the tour leads from Hilton Village by the way of Lee Hall to Yorktown where the ferry carries the tourists across the York River to Gloucester Point, and over the Tidewater Trail, U. S. Route 17, to Fredericksburg, from where the balance of the return trip is made over the roads used on the outbound trip.

DRIVE CONTINUES

The Red Cross drive will be continued for several days by the Bristol workers, according to Mrs. Frederick I. Kraft, chairman of Bristol Branch. "This will afford those who have not had an opportunity to participate time to make their donation to this most worthy cause."

THORNES HAVE DAUGHTER

A daughter arrived last evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lester D. Thorne, Radcliffe street and Jefferson avenue.

Mrs. Joseph Ferry and Miss Jessie Shelly and their niece, Frances Shelly, of Jefferson avenue, were Sunday visitors in Trenton.

JAPAN DEFIES LEAGUE

Replying to the latest appeal of Aristide Briand, French foreign minister and president of the League Council, for cessation of Sino-Japanese hostilities in Manchuria, the Tokyo government displayed a firm tone inferentially repudiating the league's right to dictate its military activities.

PRESS CHARGES AGAINST HILLTOWN DIRECTORS

Rearrest Three Township Officials Released by Judge Shull

GARIS IS NOT NAMED

In prompt answer to Judge Samuel C. Shull's decision quashing criminal charges against four school directors of Hilltown township, new warrants have been sworn out against three members of the board.

The warrants place the criminal charge of malfeasance in office against the officials, and the entire proceeding will be repeated with the omission in indictment on which the quashing was based, amended.

The defendants are: Elmer S. Umstead, H. Warren Moyer, and Arthur B. Moyer. Charges are preferred by John Reese, of Hilltown township, a member of the Hilltown Taxpayers' Association, who brought the charges that were dismissed early this week by the court. He is lodging no charge against Irwin Garis, school board member who was included in the indictments previously.

The warrants were sworn out by Reese on Wednesday at the office of Magistrate Irvin M. James, of Doylestown, and they were served by Constable A. R. Atkinson this morning. The three men will post bail for hearing on Monday afternoon before Judge James.

Attorney Harry Grim, of Perkasie, who has been handling the legal fight for the Hilltown Taxpayers and individuals connected with it, has been retained by Mr. Reese, to conduct this second attack upon the directors.

The previous indictments against the four directors were quashed by Judge Shull on a motion of Attorney Mark Thatcher, counsel for the defendants, who threw a surprise into the taxpayers' ranks in the William O. Scheil hearing of a bill in equity against the directors.

The bombshell was a plea to the court to quash the criminal proceedings on the ground that the information failed to state whether or not the directors had been paid for work done, out of the school board funds. This was the basis of the indictment, and Judge Shull sustained the demurrer, throwing the case out of court.

The court's decision was announced on Tuesday morning, and on Wednesday the new warrants had been sworn out. The entire procedure must be gone through again, in an endeavor to make the directors stand trial on the criminal charges.

RUMFORD GIVES CONFESSION OF HOLD-UP WORK

Wild and Checkered Career of Quartet is Cited to Police

ONE WAS INJURED

Rumford Tells of Injury to
His Hand Caused by Bullet
From Healey's Gun

Confession as to the part he played in the robbery of the Chalfont Bank at Chalfont, and the attempted robbery of the Farmers National Bank, here, is made in a written statement signed by Albert Rumford, one of the quartet of alleged bank robbers and highwaymen who are serving jail terms for other offenses.

Rumford, 24 years old, was captured in New York City, November 14th. He and three alleged accomplices have had a wild and checkered career. Rumford escaped from his cell in the Camden County Jail early on the morning of August 17th, by sawing his way through two sets of steel bars and a steel plate.

Yesterday Sergeant Francis, state police, and Antonio Russo, Bucks county detective, and Larry Doran, chief of Camden county detectives, visited Rumford in the Camden Jail, and held a long conference with him. Rumford was taken from New York to Camden two days ago. Up until yesterday he had refused to in any way acknowledge his part in the robbery of the Chalfont bank and the attempted robbery here.

Rumford yesterday seemed disposed to talk, and admitted to Francis and Russo and Doran his part in the robbery at Chalfont and the attempt at the Farmers Bank here. He also told them that the bullet which Officer John Healey fired through the windshield of the car in which the bandits escaped, had struck his wrist, shattered his watch, and injured his hand.

Rumford says that he drove the high-powered convertible sedan at the rate of 100 miles an hour down the Bristol Pike. He told the two officers he had participated in the robbery of seven homes in Bucks county, 25 in Philadelphia, and three or four in New Jersey. He refused positively to implicate anyone else in these affairs.

Rumford is going to plead guilty, it is believed, to the charge of jail-breaking, and after his sentence is served for this offense he will be turned over to the Bucks county authorities.

Information concerning the other three alleged bandits had been in the hands of State Police of Doylestown sub-station since the first of September, but was kept a secret until the arrest of Rumford. The three are: Rae Creveling, 20, of 1119 West Glenwood avenue, Philadelphia, who was arrested on a charge of bank robbery by Sergeant Francis; Vernon Eattes, 26, of Philadelphia, who is serving a three to six year sentence for robbery; Thomas Patrick Culliney, 19, of 1537 West Tucker street, Philadelphia, who is also serving five to ten years for robbery.

Rumford was "trailed" by detectives of New York until they were sure of his identity, and then arrested. He was surprised as he entered his boarding house, and offered no resistance. He had been living in New York since his escape from Camden Jail on August 17th.

"EARLY" MEANS NOW

It is never too early to shop for Christmas. Some, whom economic necessity does not compel to postpone shopping until Christmas Savings funds are due and payable, begin the annual accumulation of gifts a year ahead, but the hosts now making their first rounds of the stores and shops come under the classification of "early" shopper.

If cultivating generosity, taking pleasure in making others happy and making the Christmas shopping period easier for oneself and countless salespeople is commercializing Christmas, then a sacred day is being desecrated. The commercialization of Christmas is but a necessary means to a desirable end.

Human beings find it highly human to spend eleven months of the year gratifying selfish desires, even at the expense of others, but they find it no less human to devote the twelfth to depriving themselves to make others happy. The greatest happiness of the year is derived, not from Christmas-gift receiving, but from Christmas giving.

Avoidance of eleventh-hour crowds is not the only bounty paid the early shopper. As the objective is to buy the article that gives giver and recipient the maximum of satisfaction and as Christmas stocks dwindle rapidly, it is essential that Christmas shopping be completed at the earliest date possible.

Scattering happiness far and wide is the purpose of the custom of exchanging Christmas gifts, and it behooves each one to derive the maximum amount of happiness from his or her Christmas shopping. The one tried and true recipe is "shop early."

STORE BUSINESS UPPE

Figures obtained by the Federal Reserve Board from 565 establishments in 239 cities show that department store sales in October were in excess of seasonal expectations. These are glad tidings, the significance of which will not be lost upon the people or in business and financial circles.

Business might have been below the seasonal expectations and still be considered good for business was in such a sorry state in the late summer and early fall that merchants promised themselves they would be content with something less than normal business for October.

It is unfortunate that the survey did not cover all branches of retail merchandising, but the inference that all shared in the upward trend found in the department stores is logical.

Apparently, the "psychology of fear" is being conquered. The lowest prices in more than a decade are partly responsible for breaking the "buyers' strike." Industrial gains, recalling men and women from prolonged idleness, have helped. It was a natural consequence of the end of hoarding.

Good retail business in October means more business for jobbers and factories and more employment for labor in November. Clearing of the merchants' shelves will result in renewed orders, which will give business to factories and mills.

Now that business has a strangle hold on Old Man Depression let it lay on with all the strength at its command. These are crucial days.

CHAPTER LIII

"Sant," Martell said abruptly, when the door was closed. "Isham's not the only danger."

"What do you mean?" demanded Sant feverishly.

"We've got to watch Martin. I don't trust him any longer. I saw him talking with Wynter tonight," he said meaningly. "He might give us all away yet, to save his own hide. I'm going to watch Martin!"

Martell paused frowningly. Then: "Sant, that door of the vaults—that's become a danger point now. Unless we get that door opened secretly first and the vaults behind made safe for inspection, we may find the police swooping down, opening that door themselves. And we know what that would mean, my friend."

Sant nodded. The big man's face was colorless. Only too well Sant knew what it would mean if the police were the first to open that door as yet blocked by the fallen wall. That secret which Severn had stumbled on would be exposed—that and something grimmer still. Another bead of sweat started out on his brow at the mere thought.

"We daren't leave things as they are now," went on Martell. "Tomorrow night we must have that debris secretly cleared away. I should have felt easier if it could have been done tonight, only that's impossible; all that heavy stuff could never be moved without tackle. But tomorrow night, Sant—and before daybreak those vaults made so that all Scotland Yard could walk through them without our turning a hair. Tomorrow night at latest—I feel our margin of safety won't be much longer than that! My God! If the police were to open that door first!"

Sant shivered again. "Pull yourself together, man," frowned Martell impatiently. "Once that danger's past, we can laugh at suspicion. What can they prove? Severn's safe where they'll never find him—"

"I wish I could think that," said Sant. "That man Isham—I wasn't afraid of Wynter or Grayson—but what has Isham got up his sleeve?"

"I thought you had more nerve, man!" Martell exclaimed. "We've seen the red light—but if we've seen it in time? After tomorrow night we can laugh at Isham."

Outside in the hall the telephone bell rang. They had been waiting anxiously for a telephone call ever since Mrs. Grayson had rung up Beggar's Court. Martell strode to the door.

On the other side Martin, a furtive noiseless figure standing there with his ear to the door, crept stealthily away. He had vanished behind the green baize door before Martell appeared in the hall.

As Martell listened at the telephone, first a frown, then a look of satisfaction came into his swarthy face. Someone at the other end of the wire was speaking of "that girl at Manorways."

In the kitchen behind the swing baize door Martin had come to a momentous decision.

The car swept out from the gates of Beggar's Court into the highroad. Bill was all impatience to know what Milly's mystifying message over the telephone could mean and at the pace he was making the short distance to Manorways was covered almost before Jim could reply to Isham's rather surprising remark.

For Jim Wynter, Isham within the space of the last hour had suddenly become more of a figure of mystery than ever.

It puzzled him why this man

Her voice faltered. And suddenly, almost before either quite knew, she was in his arms.

should have apparently gone out of his way to show his hand to Martell and Sant—only one of many puzzling things.

But already they were rapidly nearing Manorways and any further talk would have to be deferred. Isham, whose cottage was a few hundred yards further on, sang out to Bill:

"No need to drive me any further than your place, Mr. Grayson. Now that I haven't to keep up the polite fiction of lameness—that's entailed a hell of a lot of discomfort for me these four weeks," with a laugh, "I'm glad to stretch my legs."

Almost before they drew up outside Manorways the door was flung open and Milly appeared, as if she had been listening for the sound of the car, outlined through the misty night against the lighted hall. She came running excitedly down the garden path to the gate as her husband and Jim jumped out of the car.

HOLDUP

"Oh, Bill, what do you think?" she broke out breathlessly. "There has been a holdup here at Manorways!"

Three startled men stared at her. "Good Lord, Milly," cried a staggered Bill.

"Two masked men, Bill!" went on Milly excitedly. "We were nearly scared out of our lives, of course—though somehow it didn't seem a bit real whilst it was happening. One reads of such things, but one never thinks of them, as possibly happening to oneself! They suddenly appeared at the door of the room after Clara had answered a knock. I thought it must be a joke at first."

"Katharine—is she all right?" broke in Jim impatiently.

"Yes, as it happens. Only if it hadn't been for Webber—"

"Webber?" Isham's voice was amazed.

"Yes, your man, Mr. Isham. He

Glad You Like Them!

Our new buses, and our half-hourly schedule along Bristol Pike from Philadelphia City Line eastward, have brought us many complimentary expressions.

The new buses are thoroughly up-to-date. They are quiet, speedy, comfortable. We are glad you like them.

If traffic increases, as we hope it shall, and the public's use of the equipment makes it necessary, we shall increase the fleet. But this will not come until the need for more new buses is apparent.

With this half-hourly schedule, the need for a private individual to maintain a private transportation vehicle for ordinary travelling becomes even less than in the past.

No matter how small or cheap your private car may be, it is expensive to operate. You save money when you put your car up for the winter, and use the modern, safe, comfortable buses which we have put at your disposal.

MORRISVILLE TEAM
GIVES COURT SCHEDULE

MORRISVILLE, Nov. 28.—Lewis H. Rupp, director of athletics and head coach of basketball at Morrisville High School, yesterday released the Blue and Gold's court schedule for the coming season. An engagement with the Southampton five, on December 10, at the Robert Morris gym will open the season of 18 or 19 games while a meeting with the Falls Township combination on March 1, at the same court, will bring the season to a close.

Since Russell Beisswanger, a Morrisville faculty member and the assistant basketball coach of last season, is now teaching at Weehawken, N. J., the squad of twenty men will be entirely under the supervision of Rupp this season.

Regular practices have been held, from two to three times a week, since October 13 and such Trenton stars as Jimmy McKinstry, Mickey McNiff, Bob Bousenberry and Jack Malone have frequented the local gym giving the high school candidates some real scrimmages and showing them just how it should be done.

Rupp has made no cuts in the squad up to this time but after Thanksgiving with the appearance of several football men, the varsity squad of ten members will be chosen with a group of ten second-string men to be held in reserve.

Puritanical Moral Code
World Need, Says Solla

The world today is in need of a "Puritanical Code of Morals" according to the Rev. George A. Solla, pastor of the Church of Our Saviour, who was the speaker at the Union Thanksgiving service held Thanksgiving morning in the First Baptist Church, here.

The Rev. Solla delivered a forcible sermon in which he sketched the origin and history of Thanksgiving services from the time of their inauguration. He said that the change which has come about in the observance of Thanksgiving is enough to make those sturdy Puritans turn over in their graves.

"The day has developed into 'Turkey and Football Day' said the speaker and 'to many that is all that the day amounts to.'"

"There is no thanksgiving to Almighty God on the football field," remarked the speaker.

The Rev. Solla said that the audience present was fairly good but he inquired "where are the others?" In the opinion of the speaker there is much to be thankful for. "We have been spared from more calamities than have visited us, we have much food but there is hunger and there is much clothing but some are naked, there is much work to be done but many are out of employment."

"We should be thankful for those men and women through whom we are enjoying the blessings of this land today. We should be thankful for those who laid the foundations of this great land."

Reverting to the Puritanical Code of Morals the speaker took to task those women who scantily garbed parade the bathing beaches of the resorts under the guise of doing it for health's sake. He criticized the athletic uniforms of an abbreviated nature which are worn by girls upon the athletic field.

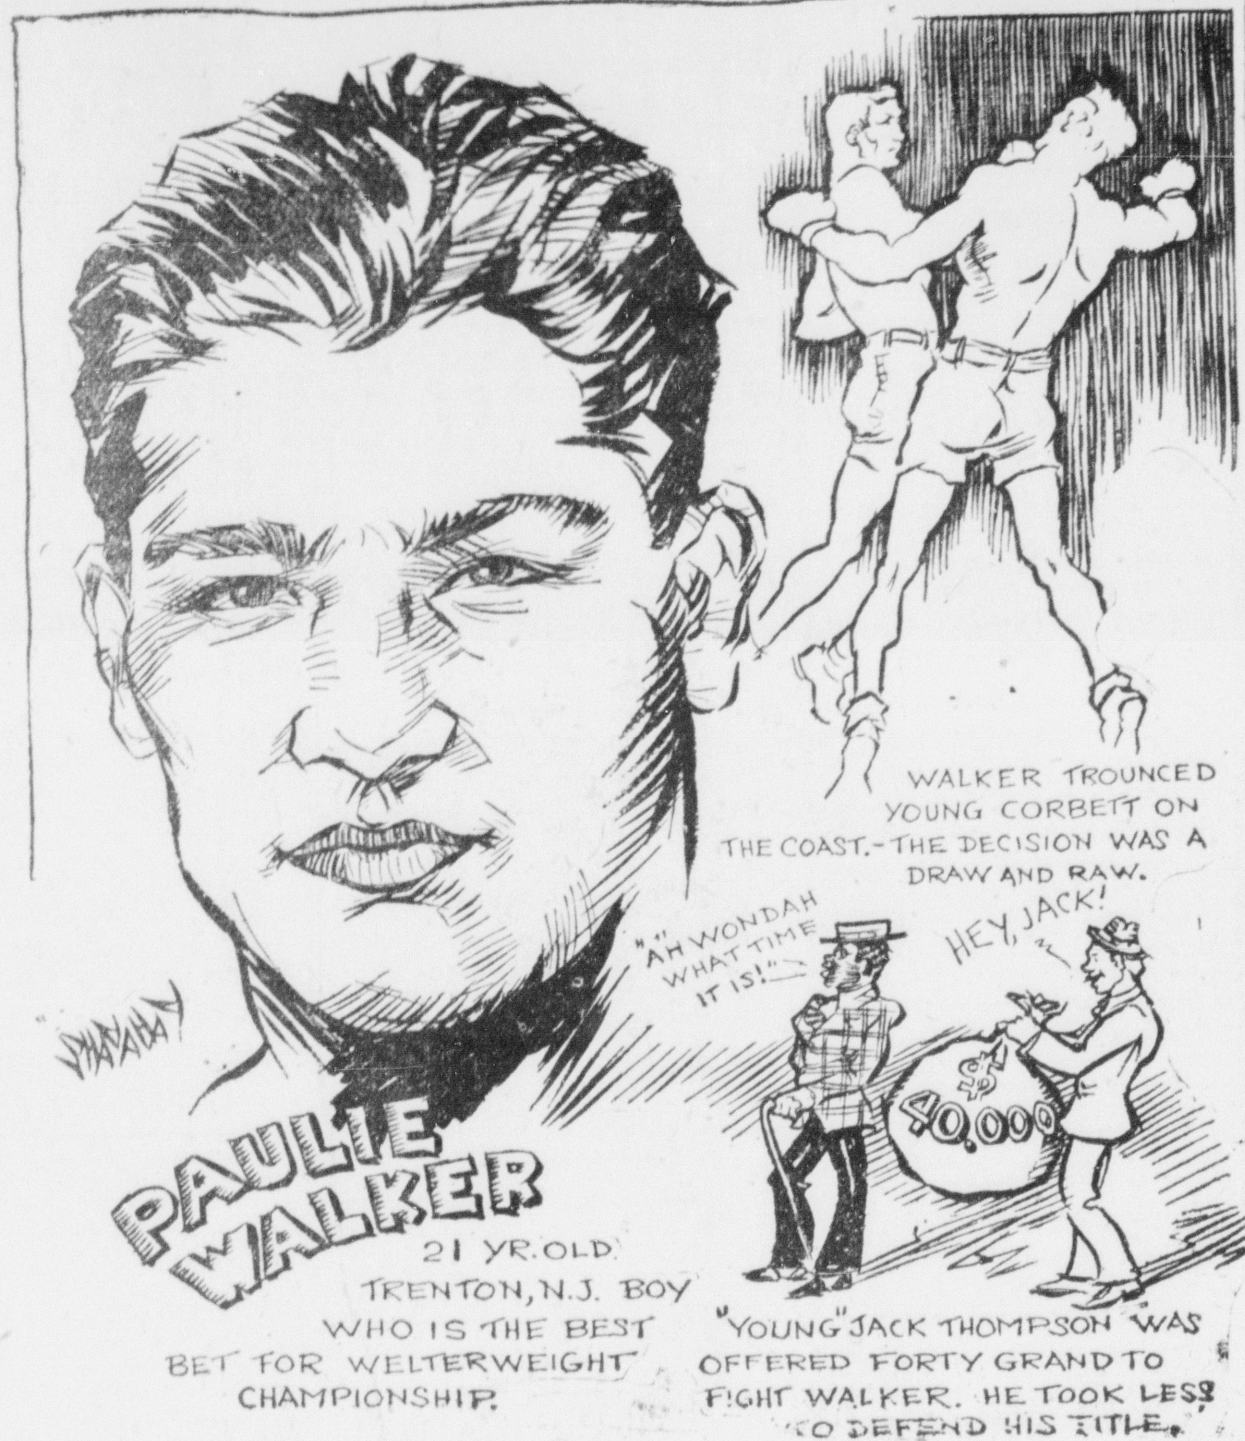

Men have lost their chivalry, said Rev. Solla. By way of illustration he cited how men used to rush to give up their seats to women entering trolley cars. "But this is no longer done unless we have our wives with us."

"For the past 15 years women have been aping the men and now the men are aping the women," he took to task women who smoke and called attention to instances where women are doing the work and the men are remaining in the homes.
